Seth Carr got $1,000 per day

London

Seth Carr, who played the child version of actor Michael B. Jordan's character Killmonger in the movie 'Black Panther' got paid $1,000 a day on set.

According to reports, it is unclear how many days he worked on the film, but his guaranteed pay cheque was at least $7,654 plus any future residuals if one goes by the 10-yearold's contract obtained.

Along with Young Killmonger, Carr is known for his roles on the shows 'Bosch' and 'Knight Squad'. He also played Young Holt on 'Brooklyn Nine-Nine'. (IANS)

Actress Meghan Markle is "missing" her online friends after being forced to give up social media ahead of her wedding to Prince Harry.

Kensington Palace said that she'd closed down her Instagram, Twitter and Facebook accounts in January - ahead of her May wedding to Prince Harry.

But now insiders claim Markle is suffering from withdrawal symptoms from social media and is missing the online community, reports mirror.co.uk.

"She is missing her friends and also the wider circle she had on social media," sources said.

"She's finding things harder than she thought and it will take time to adjust."

The former "Suits" actress had 350,000 followers on Twitter, 800,000 on Facebook and a whopping 1.9 million on Instagram. (IANS)

Actress Alicia Vikander looked forward to her pizza days" when she was in training for Tomb Raider'.

The 29-year-old plays Lara Croft in the classic action movie's 2018 reboot, and her determination to get in shape for the role meant she looked forward to Sunday's where she could indulge in a cheat meal.

Speaking to Glamour Magazine, she said: "[We were training] five to six days a week, and Sundays were pizza days. I think the first thing I said when I woke up on Sunday's was 'its pizza day!"

But the Academy Award-winning beauty loved how the 'Tomb Raider' training made her feel and she has been trying to incorporate more muscle building into her postfilming work out routines. (femalefirst. co.uk)
