Lower Civil Court orders supervisor to pay BD1,000 in compensation for assaulting female student school supervisor has been ordered by the Lower Civil Court to pay BD1,000 in compensation to a female student she assaulted.

The ruling comes after the supervisor was previously convicted in a criminal court for the assault.

According to lawyer Ahmed Al Haddad, the student's father filed a civil lawsuit after the supervisor was found guilty of assaulting his daughter in 2022.

The supervisor had struck the student on the neck and shoulder with a small bag, causing muscle injuries to the right neck and shoulder.

Al Hadad stated that the criminal court had previously sentenced the supervisor to a BD50 fine.

This final ruling led the father, acting as his daughter's legal guardian, to file a civil claim seeking BD2,500 in compensation for both material and moral damages.

The Shura Council and the Council of Representatives will tackle seven decrees carried over from the previous two legislative periods during their session in October.

The decrees address a variety of issues. One amends the internal rules of the Council of Representatives, dating back to a 2002 law.

Another revises the 2017 Real Estate Regulatory Law. A separate decree introduces a new article to a 2006 regulation concerning industrial practices for Gulf Cooperation Council states.

Additional decrees include adjustments to development bonds, changes to the 2006 drainage law, updates to the 1999 law governing the Bahrain Petroleum Company, and amendments to the 2002 Telecommunications Law.

Asian employee faces bribery attempt case

TDT | Manama

 \mathbf{A} n Asian employee working for an engineering company contracted by the General Sports Authority (GSA) to provide staff is facing bribery charges.

The employee, who has not been publicly identified, denies allegations that he demanded a BD30,000 bribe from a contractor working for the GSA in exchange for securing a contract.

The Lower Criminal Court is scheduled to hear closing arguments in the case on August 21st, marking a crucial stage in the legal proceedings.

The incident came to light after the Public Prosecution received a report from the General Directorate of Anti-Corruption and Economic & Electronic Security detailing a complaint filed by the GSA.

The complaint alleged that an employee had solicited a bribe from a contractor.

The Financial Crimes and Money Laundering Prosecution investigated the matter thoroughly, taking statements from GSA officials and witnesses.

They also translated audio recordings of conversations between the accused and the contractor.

BSB earns "Outstanding" in BQA review

TDT | Manama

The British School of Bahrain (BSB) announced that it has earned the highest rating of "Outstanding" in its recent review conducted by the Bahrain Education and Training Quality Authority (BQA).

This prestigious recognition follows the school's most recent accolade of being rated "Outstanding in all areas" by the British School Overseas (BSO), just last week.

BSB is the first school in Bahrain to navigate the new framework. The leading institution $\,$ A view of the British School of Bahrain was chosen by the Ministry of a world-class British education leadership, management, and Education to pioneer the merg-Overseas (BSO) inspections.

The report also praised the school's success in adopting exceptional student-centred teaching and learning strategies to accommodate diverse student learning needs, ensuring every learner thrives.

Liz Stanley, BSB Executive Headmaster, commented: This 'Outstanding' rating is a monumental achievement for our school. Maintaining this rating since the previous review in March 2016 reflects the passion of our educators, staff, and students. It underscores our commitment to cultivate an exceptional learning environment where students are encouraged to excel academically, develop strong character, and embrace a global perspective. The Curious Case of Money rowing up with a house full of bankers and financial con-Sultants, our family dinners - much to my dismay - were less 'pass the salt' and more "let's delve into the recent changes in interest rates". Each meal resembled a high energy fueled debate, with my father and brother as formidable opponents, each passionately presenting their viewpoints. Meanwhile, my mum and I exchanged knowing smiles of 'here we go again' as we turned our undivided attention to the real task at hand - devouring the culinary delights before us. Each bite was a delicious escape from the intellectual storm brewing across the table - ridding the incessant battle we witnessed every

But then, like a knight in shining armour (or maybe just a really well-written textbook), GCSE Economics came to my rescue. Soon these heated debates became more than just background noise that I tried to tune out - it became a new language. One I was adamant to learn. Much to the dismay of my mother, I started paying more attention to the dinner pitching in while she was left alone to focus on the food.

Soon, I started questioning everything. Whether it was the clinking of coins in my pocket or the swipe of the credit card at the till, the payments made online along with the chatter of cryptocurrency on news bulletins. - these everyday realities started to instil curiosity. They became puzzles demanding answers- which one of these is "money"?

Money: what was once a simple tool – a source of happiness for my mother who is a firm believer of treating herself to weekend retail therapy and a means to buy that coveted candy bar I was craving for myself - morphed into a complex enigma. Where did it come from? Who printed it? How did paper money become so widely accepted? How do people trust that money has value?

These questions ran rampant in my mind like an unbridled storm - leading me down a rabbit hole which urged me to explore the topic further and delve into the intricacies of the concept of "money" in economic thinking.

Money is defined as a medium of exchange in the form of coins and banknotes. However, over time, the exact definition of money has evolved and been distorted by technological advancements wherein certain elements such as the tangibility and the intrinsic value of the money have been altered over the passage of time. Initially, money was created to address the inherent impracticalities relating to the bartering process which was riddled with issues like divisibility, a measure of value, and other monetary aspects. Bartering was further complicated by the necessity of achieving a double coincidence of wants, making transactions cumbersome and inefficient.

Therefore, money in terms of coins and banknotes was created with the emergence of banks and financial institutions. The establishment of these tangible entities of fiat currency enabled an easier medium of exchange which significantly enhanced transactional efficiency wherein the introduction of a universally accepted unit of account provided a standardised metric to set prices and determine the value of commodities. Furthermore, unlike non-durable goods and perishable commodities, money possessed durability as well as stability - acting as a store of value and a standard of deferred payment. Such improvements in the money system expedited monetary transactions, fostering efficiency as well as transcending the countless limitations associated with the bartering process.

However, over time, the very essence of money underwent a metamorphosis driven by technological advancements. The rise of digital currencies like Bitcoin and Ethereum challenged the status quo wherein their decentralised structure enables individuals to conduct peer-to-peer transactions, bypassing traditional financial institutions like banks. This disrupts the existing power dynamic, potentially reduces transaction fees, and raises questions about the future role of central banks in managing money supply.

In conclusion, the concept of money in economic thinking has continuously adapted throughout history. From commodity-backed currencies to the rise of digital assets, the core function of facilitating exchange remains, but the form and underlying mechanisms have transformed. As technology continues to evolve, we can expect further challenges and opportunities that will redefine our understanding and use of money.

Speaking about evolving, as has our dinner table which has developed from a battleground to a whole economic coliseum thanks to a newer and worthier opponent (in my humble opinion), dethroning my brother's title (whilst he is not there to defend it) and leaving only one bewildered audience member. Sorry about that mum - maybe you should pick up an Economics textbook too!
