Rublev disagrees with Tsitsipas' 'few tools' claim after ATP Finals win

Andrey Rublev shakes hands with Stefanos Tsitsipas after winning the match Reuters | Turin

Andrey Rublev said he disagrees with Stefanos Tsitsipas' assessment of him as a player with "few tools" following a come-from-behind victory over the Greek in the ATP Finals on Friday.

Rublev fought back from a set down to beat world number three Tsitsipas 3-6 6-3 6-2 in the round-robin stage of the season-ending championship.

In his post-match news conference, Tsitsipas said that he "didn't really feel threatened" at any point of the match.

"I just wanted to try something new, to see if it might work, throw him off a little bit," Tsitsipas told reporters.

"It's a shame. I feel like the better player. I felt like I could do more with the ball today. I felt like I could just be much more creative. I don't even have to say that. I think it's quite obvious.

"But, yeah, he prevailed with the few tools that he has. He was able to really take advantage of them and win today."

The victory marked Rublev's first over Tsitsipas in 2022, with Tsitsipas having beaten him in Astana in October and Madrid in May.

When asked about Tsitsipas'

"I don't think that I beat him because of few tools. If you take our match, every match, we have tough battles. This year I lost to him twice in three sets, and now I beat him in three sets" comments, Rublev told reporters, "I don't know if I have few tools or not."

"If we go shot by shot, I think his backhand is better than mine. His forehand is not better than mine. The speed serve is not better than mine," the seventh-ranked Russian said.

"Obviously he's a better player because he's higher ranked and he achieved better results.

"But I don't think that I beat him because of few tools. If you take our match, every match, we have tough battles. This year I lost to him twice in three sets, and now I beat him in three sets."

Next up for Rublev is a semi-final against Norway's Casper Ruud.

Messi or Suarez should win World Cup if not Spain, says Luis Enrique

Reuters | Doha

Spain coach Luis Enrique has said that if his team cannot triumph at the World Cup in Qatar he would like to see Lionel Messi or Luis Suarez crowned with Argentina and Uruguay respectively.

Luis Enrique, who coached Messi and Suarez in a successful stint with Barcelona from 2014 to 2017, said that the forwards deserved to retire with a world unfair for a player of Messi's stature to retire without a World Cup. Also Uruguay for Luis Suarez," Luis Enrique said in his Twitch streaming debut on Friday.

The 52-year-old coach also trusts his side to have a successful tournament despite Spain's inexperienced base of players and said his team, who have been drawn in Group E with Germany, Costa Rica and Japan, are not afraid of anyone.
