The Bahrain Authority for Culture and Antiquities (BACA) has announced the temporary closure of the Pearling Path in Muharraq to visitors and tourists until September 1.

This 3.5-kilometre path, which served as a route for pearl divers throughout most of Bahrain's history, remains a significant cultural landmark despite its current pause in operations.

The Pearling Path, an iconic symbol of Bahrain's rich heritage, includes numerous tourist sites and activities.

Visitors can explore historic locations such as Bu Maher Fort, Al Ghus House, Badr Ghuloom House, Turabi House, Al Jalahma House, Al Alawi House, Fakhro House, Murad House, Murad Council, Siyadi Shops, Yousef Abdulrahman Fakhro Building, Ali Rashid Fakhro Building, Al Nokhuda House, Siyadi House, Siyadi Council, and Siyadi Mosque.

The last major event held at the Pearling Path was "Tales of the Pearl Path" last February.

Organised by the BACA, the event drew a remarkable turnout, attracting attendees from both within Bahrain and internationally.

The closure provides an opportunity for maintenance and preservation efforts to ensure that the Pearling Path continues to be a cherished part of Bahrain's cultural landscape.

The election will be the first test of the public mood since the height of the 2022 downturn, which caused months of food, fuel and medicine shortages across the island nation.

President Ranil Wickremesinghe, 75, who took office after street protests forced his predecessor to flee the country, has strongly hinted he plans to run.

He will face at least two rivals campaigning against austerity measures his government imposed to satisfy an International Monetary Fund bailout package.

The five-week campaign announced by the commission will conclude with a September 21 vote in a country still struggling with a fragile economic recovery and endemic discontent over cost of living issues.

Economic issues are expected to dominate the campaign as the country emerges from its worst-ever recession in 2022, when the GDP shrank by a record 7.8 percent.

Raw meat': British team hit out at Olympic Village food

AFP | London

France may be the home of haute cuisine but the British team have been less than impressed about the food on offer at the Paris Olympic village, especially "raw meat".

Britain have brought in an extra chef as a result and complained about a shortage of the right food at the village, and the quality of what's on offer, English media reported.

Andy Anson, the British Olympic Association chief executive, told the Times that the that "a dramatic improvement" was needed.

Anson called the food problem "the biggest issue at the moment" and said the added chef was to cater for the extra demand at their so-called performance lodge.

A Team GB spokesman told AFP on Friday, hours before the opening ceremony, that things were looking up.

"I think the latest update is that we understand the situation is improving and being attended to by Paris 2024," he said.
